Program

Title :

UNITA Borders

Short description:

The UNITA Borders BIP focuses on the cultural, social and political importance of borders in the context of the important transformations that the world is currently witnessing.

Borders have multiple roles, as their spatial, political and administrative functions also have important cultural, linguistic and social implications. As areas of contact and exchange between different nations and cultures, borders can also be the foci of discriminatory practices of exclusion, control and containment, for example by blocking or slowing down immigration, or indeed causing conflict between nations. The UNITA Borders BIP, entirely held in English, has an interdisciplinary approach to borders. Its classes will discuss borders from multiple angles, including social and historical factors (e.g. immigration), the cultural, geographical and political importance of borders, the building of barriers or walls to prevent the free movement of people, and the elements of social cohesion as well as fracture generated in, and because of, border areas. In line with the UNITA mission, a special focus of the UNITA Borders BIP is the analysis of the role of borders in the context of the European Union. A number of recent events, including the Brexit referendum in 2016, the ongoing pandemic and the current Russia-Ukraine war, has led to questioning the stability of the international order, all the while putting the EU's open and borderless space of exchange between different nations and communities under stress.

The UNITA Borders BIP is very appealing for students from several areas in Social Sciences and Humanities, including Political Science, Sociology, Modern Languages, Geopolitics, International Relations, Geography, Human Geography, Area Studies, and History, but will be of interest to other areas as well, as its themes may also suit the interests, academic profile and background of non-specialists. Given its international and interdisciplinary nature, the UNITA Borders BIP aims to foster intercultural and interlinguistic understanding, comprehension and dialogue between students from different universities and nationalities on a set of issues which concerns the lives of all communities at both (inter)national and socio-cultural level.
